

Contributors to This Issue

Authors

Ken Baskin is an independent writer and lecturer who has spent the last two decades reexamining familiar phenomena in terms of the worldview expressed in Complexity Science. He is currently working on a book that reinterprets religion epistemologically, as one of the key ways human groups come to understand and adapt to the existential challenges they face. His books include Corporate DNA (Routledge, 2012), an examination of organizations conceived as organisms rather than mechanisms, and The Axial Ages of World History (2014), a comparison of the Axial Age and Modernity, co-authored with Moscow anthropologist, Dmitri Bondarenko. Ken earned his PhD. in English Literature from the University of Maryland in 1977 and currently lives in Philadelphia, PA, with his wife Martha and their feline housemate, Boris Kilmouski.

Anton L. Grinin, PhD in Biological Sciences, is Senior Research Fellow for International Center for Education and Social and Humanitarian Studies. His main research interests include Big History, global technological transformations and forecasts. He is the co-author of the monograph The “Cybernetic Revolution and the Forthcoming Epoch of Self-Regulating Systems” and a number of articles in English and Russian.

Leonid E. Grinin is a Russian philosopher, sociologist, evolutionist, economist, and a scholar of historical trends and future studies. He is Ph.D., author of more than 550 publications (in English, Russian, Spanish, Chinese and German) including more than 30 monographs. He is a Senior Research Professor at the Laboratory for Destabilization Risk Monitoring at the National Research University Higher School of Economics, a Deputy Director of the Eurasian Center for Big History & System Forecasting (Russian Academy of Sciences). Leonid E. Grinin has been engaged in Big History since 2007. He has three monographs as well as a number of articles on this subject. He is a co-editor (together with Barry Rodrigue and Andrey Korotayev of 3 Vol. Anthology ‘From Big Bang to Galactic Civilizations. A Big History Anthology’. Primus Books (2015–2017).

Gregg Henriques is Professor of Graduate Psychology at James Madison University, and core faculty member in the Combined-Integrated Doctoral Program in Clinical-School Psychology.

Dr. Henriques his Ph.D. in Clinical Psychology from the University of Vermont. Dr. Henriques’ primary area of scholarly interest is in the development of a new unified theory of psychology, which offers a new scientific humanistic philosophy for the 21st Century. Dr. Henriques has published a book (A New Unified Theory of Psychology) and numerous articles on this work. Dr. Henriques is author of a popular blog on Psychology Today and has launched the Theory of Knowledge Society. Dr. Henriques is a licensed clinical psychologist in Virginia.

Joseph Michalski has taught at King’s University College’s Department of Sociology since 2003, most recently serving as Associate Academic Dean. His main intellectual interests include comparative studies of violence (ranging from domestic conflicts to international terrorism), as well as the sociological foundations of knowledge production. Dr. Michalski’s most recent paper appears in The British Journal of Sociology, “Terrorism and Lethal Moralism in the United States and United Kingdom, 1970-2017.” He published an edited volume last year entitled Sociological Theory, Methods, and Perspectives.

Heikki Patomäki is Professor of World Politics at University of Helsinki, Finland. He has also taught at Nottingham Trent University, UK and RMIT University in Melbourne Australia, and visited Ritsumeikan University in Kyoto, Japan and University of Cambridge in the UK. Patomäki’s research interests include philosophy, methodology of social sciences, economic theory, global political economy, peace research, futures studies, and global justice and democracy. He has published more than 20 books and 200 research papers as well as numerous popular articles and blogs. Patomäki’s most recent book in English is Disintegrative Tendencies in Global Political Economy: Exits and Conflicts (Routledge, 2018).

Steven W. Quackenbush is Professor of Psychology at the University of Maine, Farmington. His interests include moral judgment and narrative approaches to the study of lifespan personality development. Representative publications include “And yet Your Duty Is to Hope”: The Positive Psychology of Jean-Paul Sartre (Quackenbush, Lockwood, & Cyr, 2016) and Theoretical Unification as a Practical Project: Kant and the Tree of Knowledge System (Quackenbush, 2008).

Dr. Waldemar Schmidt is Professor Emeritus at Oregon Health and Science University in Portland, Oregon. After retiring from a career in academic medicine (Pathology) he has attended to continuing education in and writing on human psychology and psychiatry over the past fifteen years. In the course of that endeavor he has become a member of the Society for Theoretical and Philosophical Psychology (APA Division 24). He is, in addition, a member of the of The Theory of Knowledge Society, wherein he also serves as a member of that society's executive committee. He is the author of multiple peer-reviewed articles and presentations in numerous medical journals, the founder and editor of Cytopathology Annual, a past officer of The Papanicolaou Society, and the author of Principles and Techniques in Surgical Pathology.

Barry Wood is a faculty member of the Department of English in the University of Houston. A Canadian by birth, Barry Wood earned a B.A. from University of Toronto ('63), M.A. from University of British Columbia ('68) and doctorate in English and American Literature, Humanities, and Religious Studies from Stanford ('74). During 47 years on the faculty at University of Houston, he has held visiting appointments at Trent University, Canada ('80, '81), the UH London Studies Program ('85), and four years at Institut Teknologi Mara, Malaysia, in conjunction with SUNY/ITM Cooperative Program (1987-1991). His publications include a high school teaching edition of Huckleberry Finn (1968), two books in religious philosophy written while in graduate school ('70, '72), and an edited collection of critical essays on Malcolm Lowry ('80). He has essays included in Norton Critical Editions on Henry David Thoreau and Mark Twain. Beginning with several editorials related to the first Earth Day (April 22, 1970), Barry has more than sixty publications in literature, education, the environment, and big history.

Translators

Daniel Barreiros is Associate Professor of Economic History and International Political Economy at the Federal University of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. He is member of the International Big History Association and researcher at the Bioethics and Applied Ethics Center (UFRJ, Brazil). His research is focused on the big history of warfare, cooperation and inequality among human societies.

Daniel Ribera Vainfas is MA in International Political Economy (Federal University of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil), Researcher at the Bioethics and Applied Ethics Center (UFRJ, Brazil), and PhD student at the Institute of Economics of the Federal University of Rio de Janeiro.

Copyeditor

Lacy Loar-Gruenler is a graduate of Villanova University. She has worked as a corporate attorney, a journalist and a newspaper editor. She is currently a graduate student in Creative Writing and Literature at Harvard University.